Course Description

This graduate-level course focuses on mass political behavior within the American political system. The goal of this course is to give students an introduction to some of the major questions in the study of American political behavior, and how people have gone about answering them. The background goal is to help students practice reading work critically and think through the difficulties of social science research in preparation for individual research projects. The course examines political ideology, public opinion, voting behavior, media effects, racial attitudes, mass-elite relations, and opinion-policy linkages.

Class Structure and Discussants

This class is designed to prioritize structured discussion over lecture. Everyone is expected to come to class having done the reading, reflected on it, and prepared questions and other thoughts they want to contribute to a lively discussion. After the first meeting of the class, student discussants will introduce weekly topics and guide discussion during most class sessions. Everyone in the class must sign up to serve as a discussant for at least one class meeting. The student discussant for each class session will:

1. Introduce and summarize the readings
2. Raise questions for discussion by the rest of the class
3. Initiate and guide the discussion in class

Assignments

Final grades for the course will be based on:

Class Participation (15%): In-class discussion is an important part of this course, and students are expected to contribute regularly to the conversation. Participation can take a variety of forms, including (but not limited to): serving as discussants for class sessions, asking questions of me or other students in the class, answering questions I pose in class, answering questions posed by other students, or offering commentary on course materials. Quality is more important than quantity.

Collaboration Memo (15%): Graduate school can be lonely, but academia is fundamentally a social enterprise. It's never too early to start fostering coauthorship networks, and the coauthorship relationships that form in graduate school can turn into career-long research partnerships. To that end, part of your grade in this course will be based on a 1-page memo detailing a research project idea you develop with a peer. This peer can be someone in the course, another graduate student in the department, another graduate student at the University of Rochester or elsewhere, or a peer scholar outside of an academic institution. While you are expected to work collaboratively on the project idea, each student will independently write a memo that summarizes the project idea, explaining the research question, argument, contribution to the literature, method, and feasibility.

Final Project (70%): The purpose of this course is to help you develop your research ideas. Accordingly, the capstone project for this class will be a research proposal that takes one of the following forms depending on how you choose to approach your research question. You are not required to submit your proposals to the relevant channels, but you must write submission-quality proposals.

- Pre-Analysis Plan (PAP): This is a document in which researchers formally state their research question, declare their research design and plan for analyzing their data, and spell out the logistical path forward for their research project. These are usually written and registered before researchers collect their data and begin their analysis, and they can be written for observational or empirical studies. You can find guidelines for preparation here.
- Pre-Registered Report for the Journal of Experimental Political Science (JEPS): This publication provides results-blind reviews based on pre-analysis plans. See guidelines here.
- Application to Field an Experiment with Time-sharing Experiments for the Social Sciences (TESS): From TESS: "Investigators submit proposals for experiments, and TESS fields successful proposals for free on a representative sample of adults in the United States using NORC's AmeriSpeak® Panel, a probability-based and highly-respected representative survey platform." Guidelines here.
- Original Research Article: I'm always down to read an interesting paper on political behavior if you're feeling lucky.

Resources

If there are accommodations of any sort that would make the class work better for you, please come talk to me about it.

If you think you may need to seek accommodations due to a disability, the Office of Disability Resources (<http://www.rochester.edu/college/disability/index.html>) can help you figure out your options. Speaking with faculty about disability-related accommodations is strictly confidential; I encourage you to come see me with concerns or requests.
